LABOUR DISPUTES

- The 550 X-ray technicians decided to enforce stricter sanctions today.
- The Israel Medical Association will today offer to renew negotiations with the Histadrut, threatening renewal of the strike of their members.
- The social workers warned they will strike next week if their demands are not met by tomorrow.
- The merchant seamen refused to carry out the Histadrut's ruling on the Galila dispute, threatening renewal of the strike of Zim's ships.
- The municipal staffs of the three main cities demanded an advance payment of IL350, otherwise they would take appropriate action.

decided to pay, I would have done this long ago," he said.

Civil aviation employees have not decided on action, if the payment is not made by November 12. They are due to meet today with Rabin, to hear his final position, and then will decide on future steps.

Rabin said today, Rabin-Histadrut meeting, at best, will draw out guidelines for further negotiations. The only definitive decision which might be taken is on the IL350 payment, because that decision is urgent.

The Histadrut, its prestige deeply injured by the Government's decision, over Histadrut opposition, to cut subsidies on basic commodities, is expected to press for an economic policy based on the draft prepared by the Histadrut some months ago. The troubling issue there is the desire to impose higher taxes on the well-off, either by increasing the income tax marginal rate from the present 60 per cent, or through a special wealth tax.

Finance Minister Yehoshua Rabinowitz is opposed to such a scheme, and has insisted that linkage gains on index-linked bonds will not be disturbed.

Other ministers have different opinions. Rabin told The Post that he thinks that the Histadrut demand is fully justified.

Meanwhile, some of the meteorological officers at Beit Dagon yesterday received back-to-work orders from the authorities, and returned to their desks in the afternoon. Weather forecasts to the media were resumed last night.

Report raps handling of Hapoel funds

By PAUL KOEN
Jerusalem Post Sports Reporter

TEL AVIV. — The Histadrut controller's interim report on the Hapoel sports organization, to be published before the end of the week, reveals financial mismanagement and charges mishandling of foreign currency matters by senior Hapoel officials.

Asked last night if these alleged irregularities would require police investigation, Histadrut Controller Shlomo Stanger said he had "no comment."

The Histadrut report dwells on foreign currency allocations for various teams going abroad in connection with the Hapoel Games, held here every four years. The Jerusalem Post learned that the report levels criticism at Yehuda Lillan, the Hapoel treasurer and Football Association official who is now on leave; Yosef Dor, the former chairman of the Hapoel Games organizing committee, and Yosef Inbar, the former Hapoel secretary-general, and current chairman of the Basketball Association; Nissan Vardenski, the Hapoel Controller, and Yitzhak Pinter — the Hapoel Games' treasurer.

The report questions what happened to funds totalling hundreds of thousands of pounds which were allocated to the Hapoel Games.

Hapoel secretary-general Yitzhak Ofek said he had not yet received a copy of the report, which is prepared every three years.

Hapoel, affiliated with the Histadrut, is the largest sports organization in the country.

Rabin: Arab drive to sway U.S.

HAIFA. — Prime Minister Rabin last night defined Egyptian President Sadat's offer of peace with Israel against total withdrawal to the pre-1967 borders as "the beginning of a planned political campaign addressed mainly to the U.S., because in the view of the Arab states, and that of Egypt, in particular, the U.S. is best able to persuade Israel to agree to positions which it would not otherwise accept."

Rabin spoke at a meeting of the Haifa branch of the Labour Party, his third speech in the area yesterday and part of a drive for membership registration.

Same opportunities as Arab countries Iart-Israel accord signed

MAURICE
Jerusalem Post

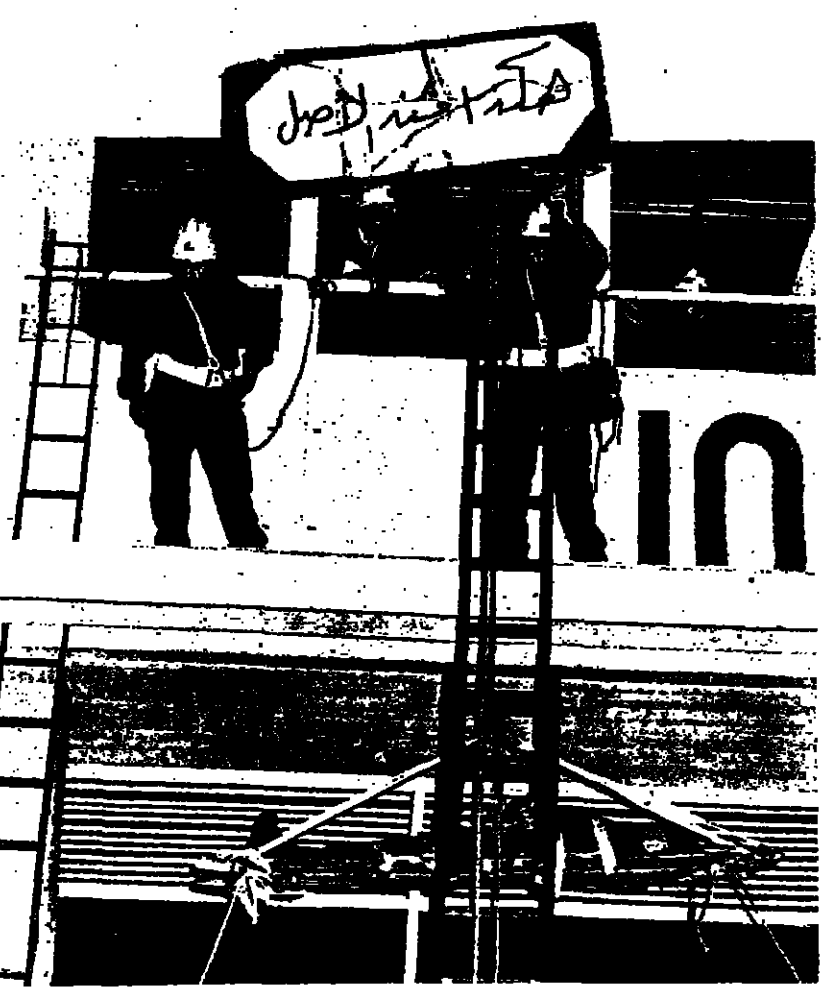

Israel will obtain the same opportunities as Arab countries in the fields of science and technology under a new agreement signed yesterday.

The new agreement broadens the free trade treaty with the Common Market which Foreign Minister Yigal Allon signed in Brussels in May 1975. It comprises an additional protocol and financial protocol to the original agreement.

The new document pays tribute to the work of the mixed Israel-Common Market commission in Jerusalem in July which agreed in principle on exchanges of information on industrial standards and for Israeli firms to participate in public tenders in EEC countries.

The preamble to the new protocol emphasises the contribution which the Common Market can make in helping Israel's economic development. This is equivalent to a political pledge of support for Israel.

Israel failed to modify the EEC's position, as taken by the nine countries, Council of Ministers earlier this year, limiting financial aid to Mediterranean countries. But Israel can now look forward to a speed-up in the rhythm of payments of a $33m. loan from the Market through the European Investment Bank in Luxembourg.

Ribicoff says Carter should have K as roving M.E. envoy

By ASHER WALLFISH
Jerusalem Post Diplomatic Correspondent

Senator Abraham Ribicoff, (D-Conn.), said yesterday that President-elect Jimmy Carter would do well to appoint Secretary of State Henry Kissinger as a special envoy to get further movement in 1977 on the Middle East crisis.

At a press conference in the King David Hotel in Jerusalem to wind up the five-day tour of the Senate delegation of which he is co-chairman, Ribicoff said: "There is nobody in the whole world who could do a better job in this region than Kissinger, and nobody who has the personal friendship and the trust of the leaders of the Arab states and Israel more than he."

He said that anybody else would take at least a year to reach the same close personal relationships and learn the subject. Carter's new Secretary of State would have more than enough problems on his hands without the Middle East.

If Carter accepted this idea of keeping Kissinger on, Ribicoff believed, "he would start his term on a great high and the world would come to realize that America's Middle East policy was truly bipartisan."

Ribicoff said he had not mentioned the idea to anybody except his wife. "I don't believe that Kissinger would refuse any President this sort of request. After all the Middle East is his grandchild — his baby. I also recall Carter saying that although he would not make Kissinger his Secretary of State, he might well call on him in special situations."

The other Democratic Senators all said the idea had merit to one degree or another.

A number of Senators said last night they were completely taken by surprise by Sen. Ribicoff's proposal and thought it was ill-timed and should not have been made without prior consultation with President-elect Carter. "If anything, Sen. Ribicoff's surprise move probably killed the idea," a leading member of the delegation commented.

The only Republican at the press conference, co-chairman Howard Baker of Tennessee, said: "It's a hell of a good idea."

Baker said he would prefer if all the nations of the world would sign and ratify the treaty on non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. However, he said, reactors to produce electric power were not the key to the problem of non-proliferation. Countries anxious to build nuclear weapons were not likely to take the material from power reactors.

Baker said it was imperative for the world to find an alternative fuel to oil. Only abundant energy could help ease tensions over the fuel crisis.

Syrian troops open Beirut's int'l highway

POST Middle East Affairs Correspondent and agencies

Syrian troops, acting as all-Arab peace enforcers, last night reopened the Beirut-Damascus international highway after sweeping into the Lebanese capital to end Lebanon's 18-month civil war. By nightfall the Syrians were reported to be rolling along various axes in an apparent bid to reopen the Beirut air and sea ports as well as the highways linking the Lebanese capital with the city of Tripoli, in the north, and Sidon to the south.

The Syrians fanned out into key strategic positions on the mid-city line which cuts Beirut into sectarian halves. An Arab peace-keeping force spokesman said that a Syrian advanced armoured force of 50 tanks and 100 armoured personnel carriers swept into all northern and eastern approaches of Beirut's Christian sector with no resistance.

A similar force breezed into the leftist-held southeastern Moslem edge of the city, with spearheads moving into Galerie Sam'an — a residential quarter that long has been one of the Lebanese war's flashpoints.

The rest were backed up behind, along a vital stretch of an unimproved road that links the Christian half of Beirut with the city's main airport road. Syrian officers said they would pause there for the night and move on toward the airport today.

Fresh random shelling broke out briefly between the two sectors as the Syrians moved in. Rockets blasted the once-fashionable Hamra street in Moslem-populated western Beirut. Several low-income residential areas also were hit.

Leftist spokesmen reported heavy casualties. They urged people to remain indoors. Ambulances raced with wailing sirens. One was reported to have received a direct rocket hit, killing a driver and three male nurses.

Associated Press correspondent Edward Cody rode into the capital behind the lead tank of the Syrian armoured force that moved into Beirut. He reported people on balconies waved and smiled as the Syrians moved across Christian villages on the way from the mountains.

Israel action on border 'routine'

Jerusalem Post Military Correspondent

There has been no unusual activity along Israel's border with Lebanon, according to informed military sources last night. Reported "preventive actions" by the Israeli army were described as routine, and assurances were given yet again that there are no indications of an organized return of terrorists to southern Lebanon.

While there are reports of 125 and 220 persons who could be termed terrorists in the village of Bint Jbeil, some five km. from the Israel border, there are no signs that they are organizing for hostile acts against targets in Israel.

The Israeli army spokesman later ridiculed a report from Beirut that six Israeli tracked vehicles on Tuesday night crossed into Lebanon and fought a five-hour battle with the Lebanese Arab Army before being forced to withdraw.

After exposing 'tilt against Israel' Pentagon forces analyst to resign his post

By WOLF BLITZER
Jerusalem Post Correspondent

WASHINGTON. — The Pentagon has stripped the U.S. Air Force's chief Middle East intelligence officer of his special security clearances in the wake of his public criticism of Gen. George Brown's recent comments that Israel represented a military burden on the U.S. The official, Dr. Joseph Churba, has therefore resigned his post.

Churba, 43, yesterday told The Jerusalem Post that he was in effect forced to resign because he could no longer function effectively as an intelligence estimator without those security clearances. He also said that the chief of Air Force Intelligence, Maj. Gen. George Keegan, had told him earlier this week that he was "free to seek employment elsewhere."

Under civil service standard employment codes Churba could not have been easily fired. But he said that when he returned to work on Monday, following an extended sick leave, he was informed that he no longer had "code word security clearance" and the situation became "psychologically intolerable."

Churba blamed Gen. Brown, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, for his "forced resignation," declaring that it indicated a "double standard" in the Defense Department. Churba made the point that Brown had been forgiven on three separate occasions for making critical comments about American Jews and Israel, while "he himself does not exhibit such generosity."

Last month, following publication of Brown's controversial assertion that Israel was an American military burden, Churba took the extraordinary step of publicly assailing the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. He said that Brown's comments were "dangerously irresponsible" and that they were indicative of a growing "tilt against Israel in the Defense Department."

Churba, in an interview last month with The Post, said that he had spoken out against Brown in an effort to counter that "tilt."

Yesterday, the outspoken intelligence analyst, who has worked for the Air Force for eight years, again assailed Brown. Referring to Brown's comments in 1974 that American Jews had excessive influence in the media and among banking circles, Churba said: "The authority on banking and newspapers insists on his pound of flesh, and now he has it."

In a separate development this week, Churba was notified shortly after last week's U.S. presidential election, that his lengthy article on America's strategic interests in the Middle East, which had not been cleared for publication by the Pentagon, had suddenly been approved. Churba had written the article during a year's leave at the National War College.

Churba said that the suspension of his security clearances "merely strengthens my earlier comments about Brown's influence in moving the Pentagon away from Israel. Churba said that he had a well-known reputation in the intelligence community as a pro-Israel and anti-Soviet analyst. "After four years," he said, "the Arabists finally got me."

He said that his forced resignation also confirmed his statements on the growing anti-Israel "tilt."

Churba, a New York Jew, said that he did not take issue with Brown's personal opinions. "At least he's honest about his views, which is more than I can say for other places in the government," he said. But he did feel compelled to speak out when Brown's personal views "on Jews and Israel" became Pentagon policy, "that Israel represents a strategic liability."

Ok: A-G must rule contacts with PLO

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

In his motion assailing the contacts and asking for an investigation, Amnon Linn argued that confidence in Israel's official position of no talks with the PLO would soon erode if the Government did not act swiftly to halt further contacts.

Linn declared: "Now the world — including friendly states — will demand that the PLO be co-opted to the Geneva talks. Now the Arabs in the administered areas will claim we don't mean what we say that we won't sit down with the PLO. Now even Israel Arabs will begin to question the veracity of Government statements about the terrorist organization not being the qualified spokesman of the Palestinian Arabs."

What, more, Israel Arabs could see in the co-optation for joining in PLO sabotage acts?

Linn wanted to know why the police have not seen fit to call in the Israeli participants for questioning. Was it because they are "Special Class Citizens"? he asked. Would the police have looked the other way and a plain citizen met with senior PLO officials?

Simcha Friedman (NRP) was less critical, but demanded a full plenary debate to discuss possible guidelines for Israel's conferring with persons purporting to represent the Palestinians.

He said: "I don't doubt the dyed-in-the-wool Zionism of the men who took part in these talks. A democratic state does not tell its citizens with whom they may or may not meet. However, if the Knesset just ignores these latest Paris meetings, then it will have given its implied approval to this unofficial political dialogue."

Two Members of Knesset who have been meeting with Palestinian representatives scoffed at this idea. Said Meir Pa'il (Moked): "If talks with the PLO do not begin today, they will begin tomorrow. So why wait? As Jean Paul Sartre said a few days ago, 'The forces of peace among Israelis and Palestinians are coming closer to each other, and will soon band together.' I regret that our Government lacks the courage to go forward with such contacts, and woe unto the country if the Knesset decides to torpedo the unofficial contacts towards peace which we are now maintaining."

Arye Eliaz, another active participant in talks with Palestinians, said: "People stop me on the street to congratulate me for breaking the ice. They know I am a good Zionist and have only the cause of my country at heart when I engage in such contacts."

clear power plants re energy authority

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter

Plans for a new university-trained people, and we have hundreds of our own top-grade scientists and technicians, thanks to years of investment in research projects, and thanks, too, to the natural aptitude of the Jewish people for the sciences."

Pledging to make maximum use of Israel personnel in the planning and construction of the nuclear power stations, Commerce and Industry Minister Haim Bar-Lev replied that "it is natural that in such a massive venture many vested interests would be eager to get part of the action. However, these vested interests' estimation of their own abilities is subjective at best. The aim of a nuclear energy generating station is, first and foremost, to supply electric power, and on time."

"Therefore, it is impossible to take responsibility for completing the stations out of the hands of the Israel Electric Corporation. I am sure the corporation and the Ministry of Commerce and Industry will see to it that as much of the work connected with building the two stations will be contracted to local firms."

Prof. Arens put forth his argument in the form of a motion for the agenda, and Minister Bar-Lev agreed to a full-fledged plenary debate on the question. The House concurred.

In a related development, Boaz Moav of the Civil Rights Movement proposed establishment of a permanent Knesset Committee on Science and Technology, which would handle the parliamentary aspects of the construction of the two nuclear power stations.

MK asks fines for age discrimination

Jerusalem Post Reporter

Persons 40 years of age and older are finding it more difficult to get jobs, Yehuda Yudin (Mapam) told the Knesset yesterday when he introduced a private members bill that would impose heavy fines on employers turning away job applicants because of age.

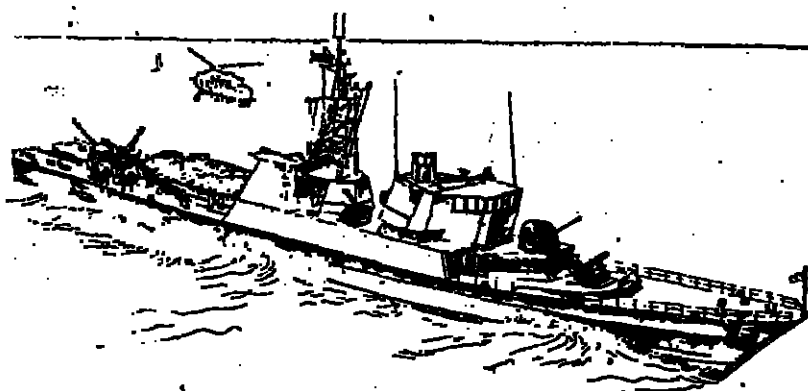

Yudin claimed that the 1959 Employment Service Act which bars hiring discrimination on the basis of nationality, religion, sex or age, was not specific enough about the penalties for discrimination because of age.

"Employers always seem to find a way around the law," he charged. "And even the Histadrut and works committees don't seem to care enough to put up a fight for the right of a middle-aged person to get the opportunity to earn a living."

According to Yudin, the unwillingness of employers to hire persons over 40 is one of the reasons behind the drop in immigration. "I know what I am talking about, because for several years I served as the Histadrut's aliyah emissary in the U.S.," he said.

Labour Minister Moshe Barzani said he was "aware of the problem, though it is not as serious as Mr. Yudin would have us believe." The bill was voted to committee.

A JOURNALISM prize named for the late publisher of "Yediot Ahronot," Yehuda Moses, will be awarded yearly in the amount of IL10,000. This was announced at a memorial meeting on Monday marking the twentieth anniversary of his death.

New 'copter-boats would fight subs

By HURSH GOODMAN
Jerusalem Post Military Correspondent

The helicopter-carrying missile ship which "Aviation Week" says Israel shipyards is proposing to build would be used for the deployment of advanced "dunking sonar" systems for detecting submarines, it was learned yesterday.

The U.S. military-affairs journal reported in this week's issue that the proposed ship, at 850 tons, would be nearly twice as large as the Reshet series of missile-boats now in service with the Israeli navy.

The magazine, which published a sketch of the proposed vessel, said Israel Shipyards believes it would have excellent export sales if the Israel Defence Ministry agreed first to purchase it. But it adds that the navy prefers the present 440-ton Reshet.

"Aviation Week" says the proposed ship would carry a helicopter for long-range surveillance and would also be armed with 76-mm and 20-mm guns, according to the report. It would be 77m long, 8m wide and draw 3m of water, and have "a 4,500-nautical-mile range, which could be increased to 5,500 nautical miles with added fuel tanks," the magazine added.

The new missile boat would be in line with Israel's overall naval strategy. Naval planners have adopted the concept of fast and highly manoeuvrable missile boats, and agree now that adding a helicopter landing-pad to the basic Reshet frame is essential.

The advanced anti-submarine "dunking sonar systems," for which the helicopter platform would mostly be used, are in current use with the navies of NATO and the U.S. The system is designed to afford a chase-craft the ability to track down a submarine without the submarine knowing that it is being traced — as a helicopter can drop a sonar detector under the water without the submarine being able to pick up engine sounds.

(The same dunking sonar system is currently in use being towed behind regular missile ships. But because the submarine is capable of picking up the throb of the ship's engines, the missile boat often finds itself as vulnerable as the craft it is pursuing.)

Helicopters have, however, a limited flight-time, which makes long sea searches impractical, unless they are attached to ship at sea which can refuel them.

While the proposed ship has a displacement almost twice that of the original Reshet class boats, it would carry the same crew — 45 officers and men. This is also consistent with naval thinking in Israel, where since the sinking of the destroyer Eilat the navy has avoided assembling large crews on single platforms.

Three die in jumps from buildings

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The Jerusalem police yesterday reported that three men committed suicide this week, each one by jumping from a building.

On Sunday, a 65-year-old man jumped from the third floor of a building in Rehov Ben Saruk.

On Monday, a man, 55, leaped from a fourth floor window in Rehov Moshe Hess.

On Tuesday, a patient in the psychiatric ward of Hadassah Hospital jumped from the seventh floor where the ward is located.

Jerusalem police said yesterday that they have repeatedly asked the hospital to bar the windows on the seventh floor, but the hospital authorities reportedly claim that this would not be a deterrent, presumably because the would-be suicide would find another place to jump from.

The Hadassah spokesman said last night that the windows in the psychiatry department itself are covered in wire netting, but windows of other wards on the same floor are not. The patient who died Tuesday, he noted, was not restricted to the psychiatric ward and thus jumped from another ward window.

Ramot road may be closed on Sabbath

Jerusalem Post Reporter

The new six-lane road being built to Ramot seems likely to become a six-day-a-week road when it is finally completed next year.

Mayor Teddy Kollek has told the City Executive that Sabbath closure of the controversial road was more reasonable than the various realignments proposed. If the IL10m road is closed on Saturdays the existing two-lane road would be used for Sabbath traffic. Elsewhere, a municipal source said that no approval had yet been given for this arrangement.

Orthodox residents of neighbourhoods overlooking the new road have held mass demonstrations to protest its construction. They maintain it would violate the Sabbath peace of their neighbourhoods and have threatened never to permit Sabbath traffic on it.

The existing road considered inadequate for heavy traffic, would be widened to bear its Sabbath load. But that load would be considerably lighter than weekday traffic since many residents of Ramot will themselves be Sabbath observers. An entire sub-neighbourhood in Ramot is being designed for residents from the Mes Shearim area. In addition, there is no bus traffic on Saturdays. Ramot will have 8,000 housing units when completed.

RABIN TELLS SADAT: Say what you mean by 'peace'

By JUDY SIEGEL
Jerusalem Post Reporter and agencies

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin yesterday urged Egyptian President Anwar Sadat to "stop speaking in generalities and instead specify exactly what he means when he talks about peace with Israel."

Addressing the 1977 Prime Minister's Mission in the Jerusalem Hilton yesterday, the Premier was referring to a message from Sadat to visiting American Congressmen in Cairo on Tuesday, in which the Egyptian president said his country is ready for peace if Israel withdraws from territories taken in the 1967 war.

Rabin maintained that talking about peace in the vague sense of the word is inadequate. The Egyptians must be ready to accept the positive meaning of the word, he explained, and to allow direct and friendly contact with Israelis.

The Premier noted that the American political campaign that ended last week "proved that all the talk about erosion of support for Israel is total nonsense. The campaign was the clearest and loudest proof that support for us is deeply rooted in the American people."

The three-day mission, headed by Baron Elie de Rothschild, marks the beginning of the 1977 French UJA campaign. The participants also visited the "Good Fence" on the Lebanese border and recent Lebanese migrants.

On Tuesday, Sadat asked the Congressmen—whose tour will also include Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Israel—to tell Rabin that the Arabs are ready for peace and it is high time you (Rabin) act on your side so we can end the 28-year state of war between us. All we need is for Israel to withdraw from territories occupied after the 1967 war and then we can go to Geneva to achieve peace."

Sadat repeated that any settlement would have to include creation of a Palestinian state in the Israeli-occupied West Bank of Jordan and the Gaza strip.

Sadat told the Congressmen he would like to meet President-elect Jimmy Carter in about six months. "After this time, Carter will be ready for us and we could sit together and then go to Geneva to talk with the Israelis about peace."

The 12-member delegation from the House Judiciary Committee is led by Representative Walter F. Mondale, Democrat-Alabama.

Sadat also told the legislators that during the recent Arab summit he had persuaded the leftist President of South Yemen not to let terrorists use his country as a refuge.

"He will not open his airports to any hijacked plane or any act like this," Sadat said. "So it is now concentrated in Libya. Well, let us hope that in the future we can convince him to do the same thing."

Sadat said Egypt was ready if the U.S. wanted to guarantee Israel's security in any peace settlement, even by means of a military security pact, and asked the Congressmen to tell President-elect Carter this.

But even in direct contacts with Israel, Sadat told the representatives that he would not agree to continued Israeli occupation of Egyptian land on the pretext of secure borders.

"As I told you, even from 300 kms. I can hit any Israeli city now. And they will be receiving the same ground to ground missiles from you. Well, what is the use of a few kilometres on the border or even 100 kms. here or there. It is nothing at all," said Sadat.

Another travelling U.S. legislator, U.S. Senator James Abourezk, Democrat-S. Dakota, took part in a symposium on Zionism which opened on Monday in Baghdad. In the course of his two-day visit, he met with Iraq's Foreign Minister and Minister of Information.

Egypt's Middle East News Agency quoted Abourezk as saying: "The Arab struggle is not only in Sinai and the Golan. It must also take place among public opinion circles in the U.S., the U.S. Congress, and the U.S. administration." The senator called on the Arab states to strive for unity, in the face of "Israeli conspiracies."

9 held in T.A. heroin raid

ARTHUR KEMELMAN
Jerusalem Post Reporter

TEL AVIV—Nine heroin users and pushers — five men and four women — were arrested by the police in an operation that began late Monday afternoon and ended early Tuesday.

Although only three grams of heroin and four pills of an unidentified drug were seized, police believe that this may be part of a much larger supply.

The arrest of the nine began in the Shabaz quarter here. Acting on intelligence information Monday afternoon, police stalked out a house on Rokach Street in the quarter.

(The householder, a 28-year-old woman, is known to the police and was linked a year ago with the seizure of 150 grams of heroin that had been smuggled into Israel from Amsterdam. She was questioned at the time, but was released for lack of evidence.)

Two women came to the house on Monday night. Shortly after, a taxi carrying three men drove up. All are known drug dealers. The three men, left and were arrested. They had no heroin on them, but they did have IL12,000 which police suspect came from selling heroin.

During the course of the evening, two other men were arrested in possession of unidentified pills. Two women who entered the house and left by taxi were apprehended on Herbert Samuel Boulevard.

When the police caught up with the taxi, one of the women offered to cooperate. She was sent back to make a second purchase. However, someone in the house recognized her, whereupon police burst in and confiscated three grams of heroin—stuck to the householder's buttocks with chewing gum.

Policeman's wife held for running brothel

TEL AVIV—The wife of a local police officer was accused in the Magistrate's Court here on Tuesday of operating a brothel in her Bat Yam apartment.

The woman, who was released on IL3,000 bail, did not deny the accusation, but expressed regrets. The court barred publication of her name, "to protect her small children."

Her husband, it was learned, had been interrogated about his wife's business, but said he knew nothing about it. (Ntm)

No police investigation of Ofer flat

USSR at UN: 'Total M-E settlement urgent'

UNITED NATIONS. — The Soviet Union on Tuesday night issued a new call for a resumption of the Geneva Middle East peace conference and said anyone delaying this would be "assuming a heavy responsibility."

Soviet representative Richard Ovinnikov was addressing the Security Council's resumed debate on an Egyptian complaint alleging repressive measures by Israel in the administered territories.

Ovinnikov said the situation in the territories was characterized by "barbarous repression."

Israel was openly plundering its natural resources and "trampling under foot the religious feelings of the Moslem population," he added. Rejecting step-by-step diplomacy, he declared: "There is no alternative to a comprehensive political settlement in the Middle East. There is no alternative to the immediate convening of a peace conference on the Middle East in Geneva."

The Soviet Union was the only Council member to speak at the Council's third meeting this month on the Egyptian complaint of October 20 accusing Israel of among other things, "condoning the acts of desecration" of Moslem holy places in Hebron by Israeli extremists.

Ovinnikov said the three essentials for a settlement were Israeli withdrawal from all Arab territories, satisfaction of the Palestinians' right to create their own state and international guarantees for the security and independence of all Mideast states.

He accused the Israelis of oppressing the Arabs and practicing "galloping annexation" by creation of new Jewish settlements.

Moroccan Ambassador Ali Bengelloun, one of three non-members of the Council who spoke, called for "decisive action" to bring about Israeli withdrawal. He charged that, in trying to make Jerusalem a Jewish city, Israel had destroyed the Moroccan quarter there.

Council President Jorge Edgardo Illueca, of Panama, adjourning the Council after an hours' meeting, did not set a date for the next one. (Reuters, AP)

U.S., Vietnamese to open talks Friday on normalizing relations

WASHINGTON. — The U.S. and Vietnam will open preliminary talks on Friday in Paris on the possibility of beginning normal relations, American officials said yesterday.

The talks will be the first between the two countries since the Paris peace agreement was signed almost four years ago.

In a related development, Vietnamese officials said an application by Hanoi for admission to the UN will come up in the Security Council on Friday and a vote is expected Monday.

The Ford administration has said it will veto the Vietnamese application if there is no substantial progress toward obtaining an accounting of the 800 Americans listed as missing in action in Vietnam.

President-elect Jimmy Carter has expressed support for this position but said that the Ford administration's inability to obtain an MIA accounting is one of its most embarrassing failures.

The Paris talks are aimed at finding out whether there is any basis for substantive negotiations on normalizing relations. Officials said it is doubtful that any significant progress toward this goal can be made before the Carter administration takes office 10 weeks from now.

The chief Vietnamese objective in the talks is securing U.S. war reconstruction aid. U.S. promised such assistance in the 1973 Paris Agreement, but the Ford administration has said that Vietnam disqualified itself from receiving U.S. aid because of its invasion and conquest of South Vietnam 18 months ago.

The American delegation at the talks will be headed by the deputy chief of mission at the U.S. Embassy in Paris, Samuel Gammmon. The Vietnamese are expected to be represented by a diplomat of similar rank. The locale of the talks was not disclosed.

The two countries have been exchanging notes on the possibility of opening talks, since last April, and have been haggling over the past month.

Meanwhile, the Pentagon reported Tuesday saying the Vietnamese captured more U.S.-made tanks, more than 1.6 million after the South Vietnamese government collapsed in the spring of 1975. The newly declassified report gave the first detailed breakdown of about $50 million in U.S. military hardware, said, however, that much equipment captured may have been unusable because of damage.

'Anarchists' kill Ethiopian official

ADDIS ABABA. — A high-ranking civilian official was assassinated on Monday by what the government identified as "anarchists."

Gustanet Zewde, 39, permanent secretary in the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs, was gunned down Monday night as he was leaving his office in one of Addis Ababa's busiest areas, a government announcement said yesterday.

A series of assassinations was launched a month ago by an underground movement which has been calling for people's government instead of the military.

The American-educated manpower economist's death came one week after the military executed 23 persons, mostly members of the extreme leftist underground movement of the Ethiopian People's Revolutionary Party, for carrying out murders and counter-revolutionary crimes in the capital. (AP)

'Virtual stop' to flight from Angola

OSEAKATI, South West Africa. — Fighting between Angolan government troops and dissident guerrillas raged unabated yesterday, with rifle and artillery fire clearly heard from across the border, South African officials here said. They added that the flow of refugees from Southern Angola had virtually stopped. Those who arrived here reported pro-government Cuban soldiers were firing at the refugees in an attempt to halt the exodus.

The refugees claimed government troops, Cubans and guerrillas of the South West Africa People's Organization (SWAPO), wanted to crush rebel Unita forces by today, the first anniversary of Angola's independence from Portugal.

Unita (Union for Total Independence of Angola) is headed by Dr. Jonas Savimbi. Although the government announced its victory over rival nationalist groups early this year, Unita is still strong in southern Angola.

Angola's ruling party yesterday accused "international imperialists" of infiltrating guerrillas among refugees returning from neighbouring countries. In a message broadcast over Luanda Radio, the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA), said the guerrillas had mined roads and destroyed equipment.

"Imperialism continues to make war against us," the broadcast, monitored in London, said. "It continues to set up bases for the puppets... training them and supplying them with arms and equipment. It continues to recruit mercenaries."

The MPLA, which gained power after a bitter civil war against two rival independence movements, also said it will launch a "general offensive" in the army to speed up its organization and military power, strengthen discipline and raise its political and ideological level. (Reuters)

British deny Saudi arms deal pending

By MARK SEGAL

Jerusalem Post Correspondent

LONDON. — British officials yesterday strenuously denied reports of an impending and sizable arms deal with Saudi Arabia. Speculation has been sparked by the current official visit here of Saudia Defence and Aviation Minister Prince Sultan Bin Abdul Aziz, third in the Saudi royal hierarchy.

Some sources are speaking once more of an arms deal involving as large an amount as $2.5 billion, and speculation was fuelled further by Prince Sultan's meeting with Defence Secretary Roy Mason, followed by what was described as "courtesy calls" on Prime Minister James Callaghan and Foreign Secretary Anthony Crosland.

Speculation was so heavy that the Defence Ministry went out of its way to issue a statement that "nothing is signed or sealed," and that the Prince's visit was "not primarily here to make purchases."

In the meantime, the Saudi prince and his party see what Britain has to sell in aircraft, missiles, tanks, naval craft, and air defence systems as the Army, Royal Air Force and Royal Navy roll out all red carpets available.

Some unofficial British sources are speaking of renewed prospects of British participation in the projected Arab arms industry complex decided on in 1974, with the Nile delta as the site and Saudi Arabia the main paymaster. Britain would offer trained manpower and assembly rights — as a start — the Hawk jet trainer and the Anglo-French Lynx helicopter. Some British sources are speaking of stiff competition with the French, whose ministers are currently pressing for Arab arms deals.

WASHINGTON. — The $100m. the U.S. spent on instruments to search for life on Mars has produced nothing but disagreement over whether the instruments found what they were looking for.

That was clear after a two-hour press conference on Tuesday, in which six scientists discussed what their findings mean to them.

One of the few things the Viking scientists agreed on was that they have found no remains of death on Mars. None of the six quarrelled with the finding that there is nothing in the two soils (Chryse and Utopia) where Viking dug to suggest the fossils that would confirm the existence of life on Mars.

"Our instrument could have detected dead organisms anywhere from 100 to 1,000 times fewer in number than there are in poor earth soils, like the soils of Antarctica,"

Biemann thinks three other Viking instruments found an exotic chemistry in the soil that is alien to the earth, catalyzed by some unidentified super-oxidant in the minerals

Viking scientists report:

No proof of life — or death — on Mars of Mars and activated by the sun's searing ultraviolet light that penetrates the thin Martian atmosphere all the way to the surface.

Cornell University's Dr. Carl Sagan suggested that Viking had discovered primitive life forms that spend their lives behind hard shells to protect them from the killing rays of ultraviolet light.

Sagan conceded he had no proof for the microbes, but he said that Biemann had presented no proof that they do not exist. Sagan said the instruments that looked for life found something and Biemann's instrument did not. The reason, he suggested, was that the life-seeking instruments were more sensitive than Biemann's instrument, which was searching for fossils, signs of death.

Senators aided in blocking disclosure of oil producers' U.S. bank deposits

WASHINGTON. — A Senate subcommittee's efforts to obtain detailed information about the Arab oil countries' deposits in U.S. banks were blocked last year by a united front of bankers, government officials and several key senators.

The subcommittee was trying to ascertain whether the Arab countries could wield a threat to withdraw the funds as a foreign policy weapon against the U.S. The detailed information never was obtained because all the major U.S. banks refused to provide it and Sen. Charles Percy, Republican - Illinois, led a successful fight to end the inquiry on grounds that it could "do a great injustice to our own national interest."

The futile, months-long attempt by the Senate multinational subcommittee to obtain the deposit figures is described in the record of five closed hearings attended by government and banking officials from July to October, 1975. The hearing record, which is to be made public soon, was made available to committee sources said that recent events have underscored the potential impact on governments of the private operations of major international banks. For instance, there have been suggestions that the dramatic decline in the value of the British pound may have been hastened by heavy withdrawals by Middle East oil nations of their sterling deposits.

According to generalized information on deposits published by the Federal Reserve Board, the total deposits of the Middle East oil-exporting countries in U.S. banks and their branches abroad was around $19b. on June 30.

It had been reported previously that all the major U.S. banks had rejected requests by the subcommittee for figures on the size of the deposits of individual countries, such as Kuwait and Saudi Arabia. However, the hearing records show that the bankers' refusal to disclose the information had the persistent support of the Federal Reserve Board, Senators Percy and Stuart Symington, Democrat - Missouri.

They also reveal a sharp split between the Senators and subcommittee chairman Frank Church, Democrat - Idaho, who argued that foreign policy considerations justified getting the information deemed confidential and privileged by the banks.

At one point in a subcommittee session on October 9, 1975, Percy warned that if disclosure of the deposits were to result in Saudi Arabia and Kuwait withdrawing their deposits from New York banks, "the biggest single loser would be the city of New York and I would say the American Jewish community centered in New York would be the largest loser of that."

Church and his staff repeatedly said that it was necessary to separate the deposits of Iran from those of the other oil countries, since Iran had a different policy on Israel and Middle East issues.

This effort also collapsed and, ultimately, the Federal Reserve Board consolidated the deposits of all the Middle East and North African countries.

Anti-Sadat plotters hanged in Cairo

CAIRO. — A Palestinian and an Egyptian student, sentenced to death for plotting to overthrow President Sadat, were hanged on Tuesday, Cairo newspapers reported yesterday.

They were sentenced to death last year for their part in an attack on the Technical Military Academy here in 1974, in which 11 people were killed and 27 injured.

The executions were believed to be the first carried out in Egypt for political crimes since Sadat came to power in 1970.

The men executed were the Palestinian ringleader of the plot, Salah Abdallah Saraya, and one of his lieutenants, Karen Ansdoll. A third man, Tala' Anasari, had his death sentence commuted to life hard labour.

Twenty-nine people were sentenced to prison terms ranging from hard labour for life to five years.

Defendants at the trial were accused of attempting to seize weapons from the academy in order to force Sadat to resign. (Reuters)

'Urals disaster was reactor blast'

LOS ANGELES. — A major nuclear accident in the Soviet Union involved a reactor that went out of control and not exploding atomic waste as an exiled Russian scientist said last week, the "Los Angeles Times" reported yesterday.

The "Times" quoted two unidentified and separate American intelligence sources in its Wednesday editions.

It said the accident happened in late 1957 or early 1958 and involved a plutonium production reactor at a nuclear weapons complex several hundred miles northeast of the Caspian Sea, near the southernmost Ural mountains.

Last week Zhoros Medvedev, a dissident Soviet scientist now living in England, wrote in the British scientific weekly "New Scientist" that a 1958 nuclear accident killed hundreds and left thousands ill from radiation exposure. The accident was caused by buried nuclear waste that overheated and erupted "like a violent volcano," Medvedev wrote.

Leftists stage protests for Hirohito's jubilee

TOKYO. — Emperor Hirohito celebrated 50 years of Japan's throne yesterday while thousands of left-wingers demonstrated against the golden jubilee ceremony.

About 30,000 police were on alert throughout Japan to avert any disturbances by leftwing extremists who had called for "a desperate confrontation against the effort to justify the invasion against the peoples of Asia by the war criminal emperor."

Police said 22 demonstrators were arrested here.

In the southern city of Fukuoka, 10 pro-emperor rightwingers and one leftist were held after a skirmish between rival groups.

The 50-minute anniversary ceremony in Budokan (martial arts) Hall was boycotted by most opposition politicians, including the Socialists and Communists.

Prime Minister Takeo Miki said the emperor had been a significant pillar of unity in the country over the past half-century.

Changes in his status as emperor, which took place in 1946, had been a symbol of the new Japan.

But then he renounced his throne and became the "symbol of the new Japan" under Japan's post-war constitution.

Meanwhile, thousands of police throughout Southern Japan were hunting a guerrilla squad dedicated to sily planning to disrupt anniversary celebrations.

LAST WEEK the Haifa Municipality Controller who checks the operations of City Hall and the annual spending of close to IL500m. of public money, presented his report for 1975/76 to the town council and the press. It disposes of the myth that Haifa is a well-run enterprise — as a private businessman or an efficiency expert would interpret the term "well run." The Controller, Daniel Schulman, evidently a painstaking man, lists the clinical details of inefficiency in the tax collection department. The amount of unpaid taxes — over IL25m, so far — keeps growing, as the collectors are failing ever more behind. But what should alarm the citizen concerned with public affairs is a section headlined "Dangerous Collection." It is important enough to be quoted verbatim:

"In the view of the department head, about IL2m. of tax debts cannot be collected because of fear of violence. Involved are places like the Talpiot Market, the vegetable market on Jaffa Road and private persons of whom the department has a list. It is proposed (by the Controller), despite the existing difficulties, to coordinate with the police to obtain a police escort for these operations which are in advance known to be dangerous. The public aspect of fostering in residents the habit of paying taxes forbids any neglect of collecting them in such cases. To accept a state in which violence-prone persons are allowed to profit from inaction is inconceivable."

Grand Hitchcock

Family Plot (Allenby, Tel Aviv and Mitchell, Jerusalem). Alfred Hitchcock's latest and 53rd film, shows the old master at his most mellow and with his mixture of suspense and humour makes grand entertainment.

Based on the novel "The Rainbird Pattern" by Victor Canning with elegantly crafted screenplay by Ernest Lehman, the story concerns the search for a missing heir plus the search for a kidnapper who demands diamonds as ransom, with all the coincidences and confrontations that Hitchcock loves to introduce.

Julia Robinson (veteran English actress Catherine Nesbitt) is a wealthy old woman who long ago persuaded her sister to give up her illegitimate baby son. Now she wants to find him so as to bequeath him her fortune. To this end she consults a fraudulent medium called Blanche (Barbara Harris) who gets most of her information from her boyfriend, George (George C. Scott). A not very bright taxi driver (the couple with whose paths they cross are a certain Arthur Adamson (William Devane) posing as an important jeweller but also a kidnapper who demands diamonds for ransom and his girl friend decoy (Karen Black).

The acting of the principals is fine although Karen Black has very little to do, but Barbara Harris has a juicy part and makes the most of it.

Mean Streets (Cinema 2, Tel Aviv) with story and direction by Martin Scorsese and made before his "Mean Streets" "Taxi Driver" and "Taxi Driver" is set in New York's Little Italy where Scorsese grew up, so that he is dealing with an ambience and mode of existence he knows.

Dangerous abdication

VIEW FROM THE NORTH / Ya'acov Ardon

This is the first time that such lawlessness has been recorded in Haifa, which in the first 20 years of statehood acquired a reputation of being, on the whole, a clean and law-abiding community. That its municipal administration was not a model of efficiency and foresight has been known to more discerning residents for some years and hence the electorate three years ago hoped to get an efficient and far-sighted mayor to set things right.

The Controller's revelation, is, however, something far more serious. He makes a point of inferring that the danger to tax collectors is located at the Talpiot and Jaffa Road markets. Those who threaten the municipal tax officials are not social welfare cases who, having no means to pay and rarely owe any taxes, have no need to resist collection and to resort to violence.

Readers with a good memory will recall that tax evasion and a bent for violence is by no means peculiar to Haifa's fruit and vegetable markets. Time and again the former head of the Israeli Consumers Council, Moshe Shahal, M.K., has drawn attention to the way in which farm produce in the country is transported and marketed through a long chain of middlemen and their helpers, many of whom are either paying no income tax whatever or paying a fraction of what they should pay.

The Minister of Agriculture and his director-general have denounced Shahal as a publicity-seeking sensationalist and have declared that everything, or almost, is for the best in their sector of the economy. But the disturbing fact remains that the allegation of rackets in produce marketing was not first made by Shahal. It was already made in the mid-sixties by a public committee headed by Michael Hazani, the late Minister of Social Welfare who was known to be a man of integrity and truthfulness.

The Hazani Report was ignored by successive Ministers of Agriculture, Finance and Police who should have been interested in carrying out its recommendations by joint action. If the law is flouted in the wholesale and retail markets of Tel Aviv, honey-combed with alleged transport, distribution and protection rackets plus tax evasion, why should the tax evaders in Haifa not follow their example as best they can on the more modest scale of local conditions?

But that is the trouble with the law: if it is not enforceable, or not enforced, contempt for it spreads gradually throughout society like the metastases of a malignant tumour. The law gets broken wherever it is used to break it and violence is used to protect the profit. The question which the City Controller raises is simple enough: why not enforce the law?

HERE WE ARE confronted with the disturbing spectacle of abdication by those charged with that task. Examples have been multiplying in recent years of Government ministers shrinking from enforcing the law for reasons of expediency or otherwise. Seamen and their Union have flouted the provisions of the fairly recent Seamen's Law on discipline at home and abroad. The Transport Minister has taken no action to uphold that law (the Officers Union is threatening to do that). Ezzed held a strike, directed against the Government, used their idle buses to drive the members of the cooperative into the main streets of our cities to disrupt traffic at peak hours. The Minister of Transport took no action. At Ashkelon the pipeline workers defied the police. No action. A State Revenue Commissioner stated that thousands of millions of income tax had not been paid. If action to match this staggering violation of the law has been taken, it is a well kept secret.

It is interesting to observe that physical violence to protect a profitable breach of the law is directed not so much against the law enforcement agents — the police, the prosecutors, the judges — as by one lawbreaker against another in the battle for the spoils. Killings are carried out by one group of racketeers against another in a bid for control of the hunting grounds. The use of violence, or even the mere threat of it, is an effective weapon, and the law-breakers are perfecting it. The most prosperous among them do not have to do the dirty work. There are now "enforcers," specialists in this skill to do it for them. No wonder that in the current investigation of white collar crime, people in possession of material evidence are afraid to testify in court.

The dynamics of this process are such that it cannot be arrested — unless the law is first respected and upheld by the Government. Public confidence in the Government must be earned. It is not a duty of citizenship like paying income tax. To win it a government collectively and all the ministers individually must meet their obligations. Otherwise their credibility is soon eroded. You cannot be a minister for long without acting like one. Public relations can manipulate public opinion for a while, but not forever.

LONDON. — THE BRITISH GENERAL Sir Hugh Stockwell, who commanded the joint land action at Suez in 1956 has described the confusion surrounding the military operation against Nasserite Egypt.

He did so in an interview on BBC TV in a series on the 20th anniversary of the Suez Campaign. General Sir Hugh Stockwell said the British military authorities knew nothing of what was being planned by the French and the Israelis. "Towards the beginning of October 1956 we began to wonder what on earth was going on between the French and the Israelis. We were never really aware of anything. In fact, we discounted it and we didn't take it into our calculations at all."

Stockwell said the politicians did not take the military into their confidence. "We tried to keep ourselves as flexible as possible to meet any political demand... made upon us..." Had the British attacked on September 8, as the army had urged, then "today we might be in the Abidin Palace..." Stockwell commented.

Asked about the error involved in the four-day delay imposed by political considerations, Stockwell said: "It was a weakness, more than an error, that nobody realised the value of following up your air offensive with a very close link on to that with your ground or air forces."

As to the so-called collusion with Israel, the British general said: "It was only in early October that we all poised to break out before the cease-fire..."

Because of the change in orders, the general said, they had suddenly to rush their paratroops and commandos back to England for training "because the parachute boys had not had a parachute drop in 18 months... I don't think you can drop into battle on a parachute until you have had a bit of practice at it... The commando brigade... had had no amphibious training for a long time... We gradually got more and more stuff out of mothballs... In August there was a serious deficiency in equipment. For instance, the parachute regiments had no parachutable anti-tank guns... They were overloaded when they jumped because we couldn't parachute out proper vehicles and anti-tank guns..."

Israel among the most strike-bound countries

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT

TEL AVIV. — Israel is among the most strike-bound countries in the world, according to a report by the International Labour Office. The report, which was published in the "World Employment Report 1976", states that Israel has the highest number of days lost due to strikes per worker per year. The report also states that the cost of strikes to the economy is high. The report was prepared by the International Labour Office, which is a specialized agency of the United Nations.

Histadrut raises $13m. in U.S. for mortgage fund

By JOSHUA BRILLIANT

TEL AVIV. — The Histadrut mortgage fund has raised $13 million in the U.S. for loans to young couples buying apartments. The fund, which was established in 1968, has now reached a total of $13 million. The fund is managed by the Histadrut, which is a labor union and a major employer in Israel. The fund's purpose is to provide financial assistance to young couples who are looking to buy apartments. The fund has been successful in raising money from the U.S. and is now looking to raise more money in the future.

Decision on car insurance rates in Knesset today

Jerusalem Post Knesset Reporter

The Knesset Finance Committee meets today to decide whether or not to adopt the recommendations of the Efrat Subcommittee on Car Insurance on how to lower auto liability insurance premiums by about 25 per cent. The Efrat unit's suggestions were tabled in the Finance Committee Tuesday, and they include such measures as reducing the requirements for the insurance companies' joint reserve fund, cutting part of the insurers' administrative charges and agents' commissions, and restoring the no-claims bonus for careful drivers. However, Dr. Ya'acov Ficker, Commissioner of Insurance and Savings, opposed most of the Efrat unit's recommendations, a committee source told The Post. The Association of Insurance Companies has protested that, if the recommendations of the Efrat subcommittee are incorporated into the Car Insurance Law, the car insurers will no longer be able to operate. In a letter to the chairman of the Finance Committee, Yisrael Kargman, the deputy chairman of the union, N. Mishor, claims that the Efrat recommendations contradict parts of the Insurance Law which was worked out as a whole with the insurers so that they would be able to pay compensation within the stipulated 60 days after a claim was presented. Mishor claims that the insurers' reserve fund, which stands at IL640m., is the minimum the companies can afford to keep under the present inflationary conditions. He adds that the insurers can no longer break even on investments made with the reserve fund because of the high interest rate. As for restoring the no-claims bonus for careful drivers, Mishor claims that as 90 per cent of the drivers would enjoy such a bonus it would be impossible to grant the bonus without raising the price of the premiums.

More university students to be trained for industry

By LIA LEVAVI

TEL AVIV. — More Tel Aviv University students will be encouraged to seek their livelihood in industry rather than in public services, rector Shlomo Simonson announced Tuesday at the opening of the university's pre-academic programme for under-privileged students. The university's counselling services will be expanded to help students learn about the hundreds of jobs in industry for people with an academic education. "The idea that industry is only for the unskilled is outdated in our technological age," the rector said. This year, 280 students — some from kibbutzim and many just out of the army — will be studying in the pre-academic programme. Since the beginning of the programmes seven years ago, about 8,500 students have completed the courses offered by various institutions.

Justices differ on anonymous kickbacks

The Supreme Court allowed an appeal against a decision of the Tel Aviv District Court delivered on June 25, 1976 (in Motion 4043/75).

The appellant and the first respondent are shareholders in Trislot Ltd., a private company with only three shareholders. The appellant, who is the estranged wife of the respondent, sued him for restoration to the company of approximately IL184,000, a sum to the amount of which, she alleged, he had bribed employees of the company's customers.

The respondent asked the District Court to strike out the claim in heshva and his request was granted. In the appeal against this decision to the Supreme Court, Dr. G. King appeared for the appellant and Mr. I. Moskova for the respondent.

Justice Berenson, who delivered the first opinion of the Supreme Court, noted that the rule with respect to bringing actions for restoration of money to a company is that these actions must in general be brought in the name of the company; but that a shareholder may start proceedings in his own name when there is no possibility of getting the consent of the general meeting of the company's shareholders to bringing the action, and when the action is brought in connection with some fraudulent or criminal act, or is aimed against wrongdoers who constitute the majority of the shareholders.

In the case under consideration, Justice Berenson pointed out, the appellant alleged that the respondent had bribed employees of the company's customers, including government officials. The respondent, on the other hand, had denied that he had ever bribed anyone, but had in fact admitted that the company had for years paid commissions, through him, to unnamed employees of customers.

For the purpose of furthering the interests of the company, claiming that this was accepted practice amongst many companies in view of the economic and fiscal realities of Israel, and was well-known to the income tax authorities. If such anonymous payments were not bribery, in the ordinary sense of the word for purposes of civil (as opposed to criminal) law, then he argued, it was not bribery.

Justice Berenson, in his opinion, concluded that the appellant had a prima facie case of action and there had been no cause for dismissing her suit in heshva. The appeal should, therefore, be allowed.

Justice Witkon, in concurring, expressed certain reservations about some of Justice Berenson's remarks. It is a well-established rule, he said, that the powers vested in the courts to strike out an action in heshva must be exercised only with great caution (see also C.A. 206/75, 1 P.D. 30/732).

In the present case one could not say that the appellant's action had had no chance whatsoever of succeeding and for this reason only it should not have been dismissed in heshva. But Justice Berenson had gone out of his way to show how justified the appellant's action was and that the respondent had, in fact, no possible defence against it. So that anyone reading ance sheets, joining her voice to that of the company's auditors, who had disapproved of this item in previous years too. So that there would be no cause to bar her from suing the respondents at least with respect to the payments made during these two years. Furthermore, he continued, he was inclined to the opinion that in so far as the payments for previous years were either illegal or immoral, even their approval by a board of directors at the general meetings and the appellant herself, could not redeem them and act as an estoppel. But as the appellant's action was still to be considered on its merits, he preferred to leave this question for further deliberation before the trial court.

Justice Berenson concluded that the appellant had a prima facie case of action and there had been no cause for dismissing her suit in heshva. The appeal should, therefore, be allowed.

Justice Witkon, in concurring, expressed certain reservations about some of Justice Berenson's remarks. It is a well-established rule, he said, that the powers vested in the courts to strike out an action in heshva must be exercised only with great caution (see also C.A. 206/75, 1 P.D. 30/732).

In the present case one could not say that the appellant's action had had no chance whatsoever of succeeding and for this reason only it should not have been dismissed in heshva. But Justice Berenson had gone out of his way to show how justified the appellant's action was and that the respondent had, in fact, no possible defence against it. So that anyone reading how judges, who are not involved in everyday commercial life, could presume to hold as a self-evident fact, requiring no proof that such practice is illegitimate, and in this context he could but call to witness the fact that even the income tax authorities recognize certain anonymous illegal payments as deductible expenses (see C.A. 522/63, 2 P.D. 15/548). So that, there were several questions which he for his part would not rush in to solve at this stage before hearing any arguments on them. And even if he were prepared to answer them in the same spirit as Justice Berenson, he would still have very serious doubts as to the appellant's right to appear as a protector of law and morality against her husband's actions, when she and her husband had had an equal say in the running of the company for over 12 years during which time she had been a partner to his actions and had enjoyed the fruits thereof without any feelings of revulsion. However, the appellant was entitled to reform herself and was only to be congratulated on her penitence, whatever her motives might be. So that at least from the time that she informed the respondent of her objections to his payment of kickbacks she was prima facie entitled to put in a claim on behalf of the company.

Justice Cohn concurred that the appeal should be allowed and the case returned to the District Court to be considered on its merits but declined to participate at this stage in the debate on the questions raised by his colleagues.

Appeal allowed with IL2,000 costs.
Judgment given on September 21, 1976.

Sadat's fancy footwork

THE PRESIDENT OF EGYPT told a visiting group of U.S. Congressmen and Senators in Cairo that he was willing to make peace with Israel. In fact Mr. Sadat asked members of the group to transmit his peaceful intent to Mr. Rabin.

This was a gesture, and Mr. Rabin was right not to dismiss it out of hand. Time was, not so long ago, when the word "peace" was unmentionable by any Egyptian statesman in reference to Israel. There are still powerful forces within the Arab world to whom that word symbolizes rank betrayal of the Arab cause. Moreover, Mr. Sadat made it appear that he was speaking in the name not only of Egypt but of the rest of Israel's neighbors as well.

But something more than the invocation of the word is necessary to trigger off movement towards peace between the Arab states and Israel. The question, as Mr. Rabin correctly pointed out, remains, what manner of peace is it which is being contemplated.

Instead of giving a specific answer to this specific question, Mr. Sadat offered his American visitors a detailed explanation why it was impossible for him to engage in direct talks with Mr. Rabin: he would be stoned by his fellow Arabs. The Egyptian President, however, knows full well that that is not the issue. The Geneva conference, which he prefers, is perfectly acceptable to Israel as a venue for negotiations. But Mr. Sadat wants the conference run on his own terms, and not in accordance with the terms of reference laid down in Resolutions 242 and 338, which embody the totality of the international consensus on the Middle East dispute.

Thus while talking of a just and durable peace, Mr. Sadat suggested to his guests that he was still only prepared to conclude an agreement for an end to the state-of-war with Israel. Apparently he was hoping that his visitors would not be able to tell the difference between peace and end of belligerency. But the difference is clear, and crucial. End of belligerency is what should properly have been established with the signing of armistice agreements 27 years ago; and what Israel proposed to the Arab states as another interim measure earlier this year. It may be a valuable step towards peace, but it is not peace.

In exchange for this halfway measure, Mr. Sadat asked again for the restoration of what Arab spokesmen used to call the armistice demarcation lines — as though these might be the secure and recognized boundaries visualized in Resolution 242 — and for the seating of the Palestinians, that is the PLO, in Geneva, as though that violent organization already represented an existing state in the area, in the sense of Resolution 338. He also hinted at the alternative to Israel's acceptance of his "peace" offering, by alluding to the current ability of Egyptian guns to reach three cities in Israel.

Evidently Mr. Sadat expected these sentiments to convey an idea of himself to the senators as a man of peace, ready to cooperate with the new U.S. President in the search for political settlement in the area. Yet what he was in fact courting was not a just and durable peace, but American readiness to put intolerable pressure for unacceptable concessions on Israel.

Dealing with slowdowns

LABOUR MINISTER Baram's bill, permitting a 50 per cent wage cut when workers apply what are popularly called "sanctions," is running up against stiff opposition in labour circles.

The Histadrut maintains that sanctions, which are partial strikes, are difficult to define. There are many ways of arranging a slowdown. One way is to refuse to do overtime. In many cases, no penalties can be invoked for that, other than the forfeiture of overtime pay.

But there is also the irritating practice of working to rule. What if customs officials, for example, decide to examine the luggage of every single traveller to the last sock and last packet of razor-blades? They could claim that they are only doing their duty, that the endless queuing by impatient passengers is not their fault — it is caused (they might say) by the shortage of personnel. There is here a prospect of endless litigation in the labour courts over whether the conduct of the workers constitutes sanctions or not.

It would therefore be necessary to give teeth to the law. The starting-point must be that employees have to do what they are told, and any deviation from the straight and narrow path constitutes sanctions. This kind of heavy-handed legislation is repugnant to Histadrut leaders, who prefer an appeal to sweet reason. If the labour contract were binding, they point out, such punitive measures would be unnecessary.

Sweet reason, of course, is best. But sweet reason says that if people want to damage their employer's interests, they should use the legitimate weapon in labour disputes, the strike. It is not reasonable to expect the average patient of Kupat Holim, who earns less than the doctors, to finance the doctors' salary in full while he (the patient) is made to run from pillar to post because the doctors choose to institute a slowdown.

There are two sides, after all, to the employment contract. Remuneration is given for work performed. If the work is only half-done, the wage should only be half-paid.

This penalty is not oppressive in a society where legitimate objectives can be achieved without the traditional costly confrontations. The Histadrut is powerful enough to secure benefits for the workers without, generally speaking, resorting to strike action, or to sanctions.

As it happens, sanctions are anathema to serious-minded men in the Histadrut as much as they are to the sponsors of the bill. The true interests of the labour movement will not be adversely affected if the bill is passed.

ISRAEL PRESS

DAVAR (Histadrut), suggests that the situation in the sphere of labour relations calls for unconventional solutions. The paper considers the mooted "package deal" designed to curb inflation and stabilize economic processes. While not ruling out the idea in principle, the paper urges careful consideration of all details of the proposal, bearing past experience in mind — when in practice only wages were frozen, while prices, profits and even taxes continued to rise. "A package deal" is conceivable only if it ensures shouldering of the burden by all factors and strata, without possibility of evasion or circumvention.

HA'ARETZ (Independent) assigns top priority — if total collapse of the wage system is to be avoided — to suspension of implementation of the agreement which the Ben-Gurion Airport maintenance workers "extorted" from the Minister of Transport for a monthly advance of incentive payment. "However, suspension of the agreement's implementation — until its legal abrogation — will not ensure abatement of the ferment present in labour relations with ever-increasing force. Matters have reached such a turn that the public-wage-earners and self-employed alike no longer have any confidence in either the Histadrut or the Government." Accordingly, the paper calls for advancing the elections to the ninth Knesset.

HATZOFE (National Religious Party) believes, contrary to the Labour Party's opposition, as voiced in the Knesset by the Minister of Labour, that the only real solution for "eliminating the anarchy prevailing in labour relations" is introduction of compulsory arbitration.

A court above the Knesset

Should the Supreme Court be empowered to declare laws unconstitutional? ALLAN E. (AVRAHAM) SHAPIRO asks whether a fragmented society, divided on fundamental values can rely on judge-made rules to settle issues on which there is no consensus.

THE NEW SESSION of the Knesset opened with, but was hardly turned on by, a debate on the proposed Basic Law: Legislation. Despite the importance of the issues presented, there was minimal press coverage and even less public interest. Some even criticized occupying the Knesset with an issue of such "triviality" at this time.

The "law of laws," as Justice Minister Haim Zadok called it, the proposed act would place Basic Laws above conflicting legislation not enacted by an extraordinary majority. Thus, the Basic Laws would achieve the status of chapters in Israel's piecemeal constitution.

This would pave the way for a major expansion of judicial power. The Supreme Court, sitting as a constitutional court, would have the authority to nullify laws of the Knesset inconsistent with entrenched constitutional enactments. That such a major innovation, the division of political power between the branches of government should arouse so little public interest has solid historical precedent. When, in 1803, the Chief Justice of the United States, John Marshall, arrogated to the Supreme Court the power of judicial nullification of congressional legislation in conflict with the federal constitution, interest centered on the interference of the Court with actions of the President, not on the assertion by the Court of the power of judicial review.

In the late 19th and early 20th century, judicial review became a weapon of the conservative judicial majority's rearguard struggle against social reforms enacted by liberal majorities in the legislature. This process reached its high point during Roosevelt's New Deal in the 1930's. In the post-World War II period, however, roles were reversed. The Court was generally credited with a major role in the struggle of the Negro for equal rights and in the defence of civil liberties against the cold-war pressures in the legislature.

The post-World War II reaction against the excesses of unlimited government brought judicial review into vogue beyond America's borders. Judicial review became Americanism's prescription for nullification against a return to authoritarian rule. The major developed countries that adopted judicial review in their constitutions (West Germany, Italy, and Japan) had in common their subjection to American military power.

There is also a high incidence of judicial review in former British possessions, particularly in federated societies. Experts, however, have never been of one mind on the subject. U.S. Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter warned India's Constituent Assembly's Constitutional Adviser, Sir Benegal Narsing Rau, that "the power of judicial review...is not only undemocratic (because it gives a few judges the power of vetoing legislation enacted by the representatives of the nation) but also throws an unfair burden upon the judiciary." The burdens on the Indian Supreme Court have, indeed, proven to be beyond its strength.

'ZIONISM WITHOUT ALIYA'

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post
Sir, — Judy Siegel's article (October 16) on David Solomon's disillusionment with the aliyah efforts of the W.Z.O. makes very sad reading for all concerned with this vital question. While there are many other important issues, when it comes to the crunch, aliyah is what Zionism is all about. It is, in the long run, the only guarantee we can have for the survival of the Jewish nation, and is far too important a matter to be left in the hands of individual officials or departments. It is in their institutional political squabbles and promotions.

Ways must be found to stimulate and encourage aliyah by removing bureaucratic red tape, fighting apathy and corruption, and breaking the Histadrut stranglehold on aliyah. No so-called agencies, no matter how attractive they may be, should be allowed to stifle aliyah, but how to cope with the flow of olim who will clamour to lead their Jewish lives in our own Jewish homeland.

SONJA COHEN, Aliya Officer, Herut Hatzohar Great Britain, London.

Sir, — In support of David Solomon's views on aliyah (October 15), I would like to point out that the tours arranged by the Jewish Agency for people they know are not the least bit interested in aliyah put it in direct, but unfair competition with the many fine tourist agencies.

The people the Jewish Agency brings to Israel on these cheap or free pilot tours are the very people that can least afford to come through the tour agencies. Instead of wasting all their time, effort and money on these people, the organizers would be much better off spending that same money trying to interest the thousands of working-class families on a pilot trip to Israel with the idea of aliyah a possibility. They would have a better chance of getting a family that is already struggling to exist in the lower income bracket in the United States than those whose main intention is only in the direction of earning as much money as possible. We need those people to remain there to generously support Israel.

Unfortunately, the representatives of the Jewish Agency don't really know where or how to reach these potential immigrants, because they are Israelis and not New Yorkers, Bostonians, etc. Some day the Agency may learn that neither a high

In Israel the argument against judicial review has centred on its alleged undemocratic character, a charge made by Israel's first Prime Minister, David Ben-Gurion. Less attention has been devoted to the burden upon the judiciary. The larger question is whether a fragmented society, divided on questions of fundamental values, can rely on judge-made rules — rather than on political deals — to settle issues on which consensus is lacking.

AMERICAN EXPERIENCE in this regard is far from reassuring. "Only the absence of significant social divisions," declares Prof. Samuel Huntington, Governor Carter's national security adviser, "permitted the continued transformation of political issues into legal ones through the peculiar institution of judicial review."

When American politics became polarized over the slavery issue, judicial intervention only hastened the ultimate conflict. In the famous Dred Scott Case, the Supreme Court nullified a congressional compromise and attempted a principled answer to the issue of "Who is an American?" The ensuing Civil War signalled the break-down of the American political system.

In Israel the limits of judicial power have been set more by the divisions in Israeli society than by ducked issues loaded with political dynamite. This has been accomplished through the prudential use of a variety of discretionary avoidance devices. These relate to the standing of the petitioner, the timing of the action, and the nature of the question presented for judicial determination.

IT WAS ONCE considered bad form, for example, to raise a formal, technical objection, such as lack of standing to sue, in order to defeat a claim involving infringement of a basic right. However, after the Shalit ("Who is a Jew?") Case and the furor raised in religious circles by Justice Berenson's Friday night writ permitting Sabbath television, the Court began to use standing as a device to permit a lowered judicial profile on controversial religious issues.

In cases challenging the deferment of Yeshiva students from military service and the continued operation of television on the Sabbath, the Court on its own initiative raised the issue of standing to sue to avoid dealing with the explosive questions presented. In both cases the Court explicitly stated that the formal requirements should be more stringently applied when a hot political issue was involved.

In the case of Sabbath TV, there was an additional round that makes

HIGH COURT DISMISSES APPEAL ON FRIDAY TV

Even if judicial review is adopted, the court can dodge explosive issues, as it did in the case of Friday night television. The above headline appeared in The Jerusalem Post on November 16, 1968.

the absence of formal legal authority. The Supreme Court has, on the one hand, developed a functional equivalent of judicial review through the devices of judicial law-making and statutory interpretation. Statutes have been substantially rewritten, emasculated at times, through interpretation on the basis of supposed constitutional norms, mined from the vague libertarian sentiments expressed in the proclamation of Independence or the even vaguer concepts of ordered liberty. Indeed, Justice Sussman has suggested that in Israel the Court can be more activist than its American counterpart: since our legislature is sovereign and has the last word, there is no fear of judicial error going uncorrected, except through a tortuous process of constitutional amendment as in the U.S.

On the other hand, the Court in Israel has, in recent years, explicitly the point even clearer. Another suit was brought, joined by a religious workers' association, a petitioner with a clear claim to standing. This action was dismissed by the Court on the ground that the new petitioner had slept on his rights and delayed too long before applying for judicial relief. The reluctance of the Court to intervene in an explosive area was obvious.

Whether or not the Knesset confers on the judiciary the formal authority of judicial review, these discretionary avoidance devices will remain at the Court's disposition. Therefore, an expansion of formal authority need not lead to an expansion of judicial activism. The Court in fact does not now use all the formal authority it has at its disposal. The reasons for its self-restraint, grounded as they are in Israeli society and politics, will not be eliminated by legislative changes.

MICHAEL SIMON

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post
Sir, — I was shocked to read, in your six short lines, what you were ready to remember about the late Dr. Michael Simon (November 1) — "the Hagana and IDF commander and career diplomat."

You did not mention that he died and was buried in Jerusalem. Nor did you mention that he came to Eretz Israel in 1928 at the age of 24 and served, first as a teacher and then with the Jewish Agency, for years before he became the "first Chief of Protocol" of our State. He served Zionism for almost half a century before he "lived in Austria since his retirement in 1968."

Obviously this is the new style of Zionist reporting on the veterans of our movement. But rest assured that many of his friends will remember Michael Simon's merits. I trust history will be a more reliable judge than his contemporaries.

WHY I ABANDONED ALIYA

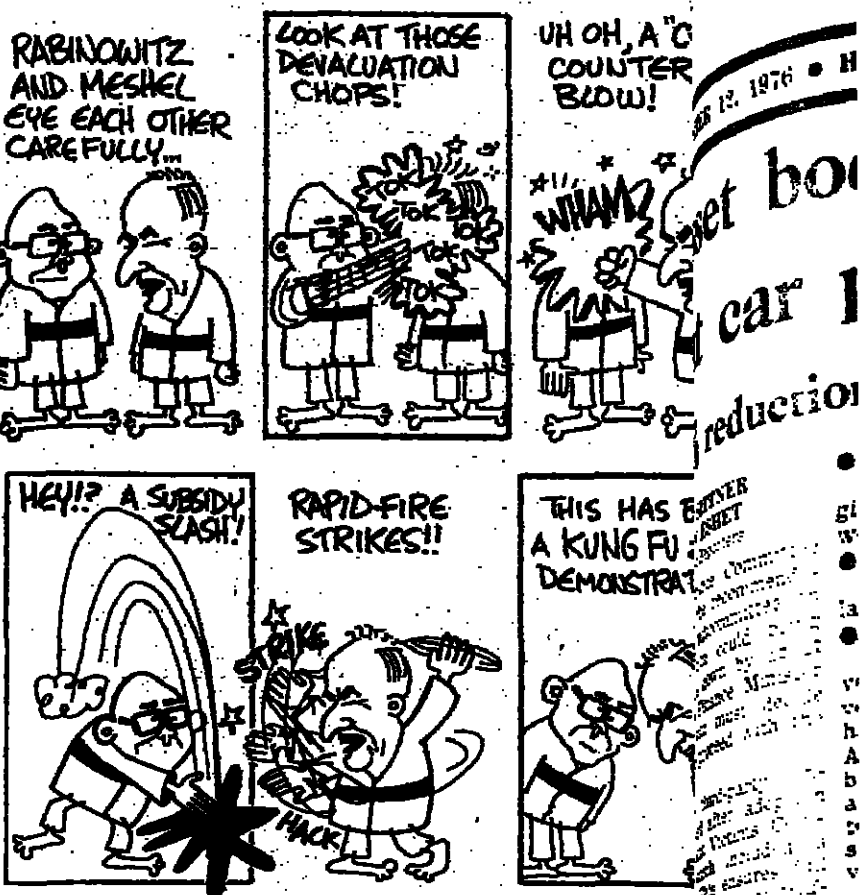

To the Editor of The Jerusalem Post
Sir, — I have recently returned to the U.S. after three years' attempt at aliyah. I beg you, please do not call me a yored.

The reason I left Israel has nothing to do with bureaucracy. I found the process of the Jewish Agency and Absorption Ministry quite eager to help. The reason is more basic: economics.

Though I enjoyed a "well paying" job, I just couldn't make ends meet. I lived in a neighbourhood with other North American and British immigrants. Quite a few leave, like I did. The only ones who stay are those with affluent parents to "help along" with some money every month, or immigrants who have some other regular source of income from abroad. This is vital when your three first years are up, and you must start paying full income tax.

VIEWPOINT

Police fooled—again

By SASHA SADAN

ALTHOUGH I MISSED the news report of how a prisoner suspected of several rapes and complicity in two murders escaped from the police this week in Jerusalem, I guessed just how he did it, since it was the usual way.

"I bet he asked to go to the bathroom and climbed out the window," I told my husband when he warned me of the dangerous man on the street. I didn't get it quite right: he didn't have to resort to a tiny window. The officer who permitted him to go to the bathroom, had simply forgotten that there was a second exit, unlocked, thus making it a simple matter for the suspect to escape from the courthouse.

"I hope the officer in question will draw the necessary conclusion," Jerusalem Police Commander Tzvi Nitzav David Kraus is quoted as saying about the incredible mistake.

Why should he this time, I wonder, when his comrades-in-arms have been buffeted by the same technique so many times before? Really, it's getting a bit tiresome to hear how the police and other security men in Israel are fooled time and again by the same ploys — and often by violent types whom one would expect to be guarded most closely. A quick check of The Jerusalem Post archives for roughly the last two years revealed the following cases:

Just last month in Tel Aviv, a convict serving a life sentence for murder escaped through a lavatory window at Asaf Harofeh Hospital, where he had been escorted by guards who waited outside. "When he failed to emerge, they forced the door open to find he had escaped through a window."

In June 1975, a murder suspect escaped from the police by climbing out of a bathroom window. "Police 21-year-old suspect had been taken to the hospital for treatment. The two had 'slipped away' from the guards who had brought him to the hospital. Half a year as a prisoner suspected of burglarizing Harofeh Hospital, where he had been taken after complaining of stomach aches. He broke a window, even and fled. In August 1974, a killer escaped when he was taken from Shatila Prison to the hospital in Afula, again after complaining of stomach pains. He escaped "from his guards" and was picked up by police.

This quick round-up shows that those who have jumped out of the arms of the law in a courtroom have made it painfully clear that there is no need to resort to long back saws into prison. A nearest toilet window can serve as a means of escape.

IN SEPTEMBER 1977, prisoners escaped from the Hospital in Haifa, to which they had been brought for treatment. The two had "slipped away" from the guards who had brought them to the hospital. POSTSCRIPTS

A CEREMONY of minor historical importance took place at Cambridge University a few weeks ago when Jesus College installed its first woman fellow. She is Dr. Lisa Jardine, eldest of the four daughters of Jacob Bronowski, whose "Ascent of Man" we saw on television here two years ago. Bruno, as he was universally known, would have been especially proud had he lived to see the day, for he himself was made an honorary fellow of Jesus, his own college, about ten years ago.

Academic records at Cambridge are nothing new in this brilliant family, for a few years after Bruno had been placed first in the Mathematical Tripos list — becoming what used to be called Senior Wrangler — his achievement was matched by his sister, Lily. Lisa, too, read Maths for her first two years at Cambridge, but then decided to switch to English, and managed to get a first in it, lecturing at Jesus in Renaissance studies.

It was a toss-up whether the first of her second child would be her receiving the fellowship, but the baby, with a respect for academic primacy, withheld her appearance.

Now wondering whether the new qualifies his newest member: all right, another Bronowski record: all right, a person (of either sex) actually born a fellow of Jesus — or, for any other college in the work.
